

Christian Iaione (Italy), Assistant Professor of Public Law, at Niccolò Cusano University of Rome, Business School; Adjunct Professor of Institutional Communication at LUISS University of Rome, School of Political science; Editor-in-chief of Labsus.org.

Christian Iaione holds an LL.M. (2008) from New York University School of Law, a doctoral degree (2006) from "La Sapienza" University of Rome and a law degree (1999) from LUISS University of Rome. In 2000 he interned at the International Law Institute of Washington D.C. as a research associate and in 2001 he interned for the EU Commission in Brussels. In 2002 he joined "La Sapienza" University of Rome (Business School) and LUISS University of Rome (School of law) as a research fellow and lecturer of constitutional and administrative law. He was also in private practice in Rome and Milan from 2002-2006. In 2006 he became adjunct professor of land use law at the LUMSA University of Rome. In 2007 he was appointed Emile Noël Fellow at NYU School of Law «Anrede» and in 2008 he was visiting scholar at NYU Wagner School of Public Service Rudin Center. He has published articles in the field of public and administrative law, urban planning and land use law, government contracts, public utilities and judicial review. He has taught administrative law, constitutional law and given seminars on public procurement, urban planning and land use law. Although he considers himself a public and administrative law scholar by training, his research bears a strong multi-disciplinarian influence, public law and economics studies and democratic theory being his other main areas of expertise. His work also takes on a comparative perspective between the legal systems of the U.S. and the European legal systems. Since his doctoral dissertation, his research and publication work has represented an exercise in the convergence of the aforementioned areas.

Iaione's research focus is currently on public governance and public-private partnerships.